RELIGIOUS ARCHITECTURE ►

Buildings are tools for ministry; they give power and presence to ideas.

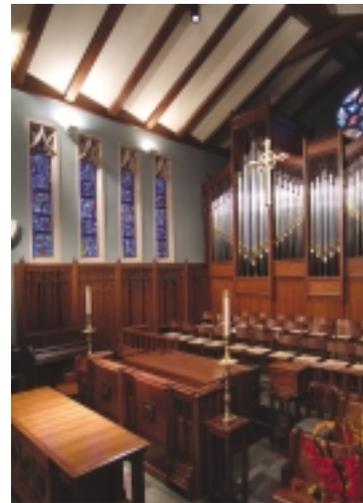

How can architecture serve the ministry of the church? Craig Gaulden Davis has helped congregations of all sizes and budgets build effective homes for ministry, in part because we equip leaders to link the building program to the church's mission and unite members around a clearly articulated vision.

We're constantly exploring what it means to be effective in the 21st century. How can you place buildings so that passers-by know that the church is open for business? How do you move people on and off a site in a way that removes obstacles to first-time visitors? How can you arrange your site now to protect your options in the future? How can we best assure that no one who crosses your threshold misses the most important message they'll ever hear?

All the while, we understand that we're stewards of resources that are not our own. We help you stay abreast of current technology in acoustics, security, energy, and construction. We'll tell you what you need to hear. And we're comfortable and experienced with a wide range of project delivery methods, including design-build and fast track.

By focusing first on the reasons behind your mission and programs, Craig Gaulden Davis helps you arrive at your destination on purpose.
